- A PD recommendation worth discussing
- Training our staff actually needs — and it may already be budget-covered
- Quick recommendation: behavior/climate training I think we need

EMAIL BODY

Dear [Principal/Superintendent Name],

I wanted to flag something I think could genuinely move the needle for our staff and students: professional development through Rewired Education Group.

I came across their work and haven't stopped thinking about it since. Rewired's approach to classroom management is built for districts like ours — pre-K through 8th grade — and it tackles the thing every one of us is navigating daily (student behavior and school climate) from an angle most PD hasn't: modern neuroscience, trauma-informed practice, and restorative accountability, all merged into one. Their goal is to improve the behaviors that are hindering student achievement and contributing to school to prison pipelines.

A few things stood out to me enough that I wanted to put this on your radar: [Add your own examples if you'd like]

- It's built for why traditional behavior systems stall out, and replaces quick-fix compliance with tools for lasting change — which shows up in referral numbers and school climate.
- It trains educator regulation and sustainability alongside student behavior — directly relevant to teacher retention and burnout, not just classroom management.
- It's designed to make theory and research actionable and applicable - and they already have great reviews from others in the field, as well as by myself.

They mentioned how some districts are covering training like this through Title II-A or Title IV-A funds, since it's professional development tied directly to teacher/principal quality and school climate — so this may not require a new budget at all, just PD dollars.

Their full district training catalog is here, and you can see an overview of their district programming at www.rewirededucationgroup.com/districts.

Would you be open to a short call with their team to see if it's a fit? I'm happy to help coordinate if that's useful — you can reach them directly at ahart@rewirededucation.com.

Thank you for considering it — I really think this could make a difference for our building.
